

Trustees Grow By Two; Beatty And Zeman Named

Loyola recently announced the selection of two additional members for its Board of Trustees. Chosen for positions on the 13-member Board were the Very Reverend Vincent F. Beatty, S.J. and Donald J. Zeman.

Father Beatty is presently serving as the rector of Georgetown Preparatory School in Rockville, Maryland. From the year 1955 to the year 1964, Father Beatty served as the President of Loyola College, being replaced by the present President, Father Joseph Sellinger.

Mr. Zeman, a Baltimore business executive and alumnus of the College, is a partner in the international accounting firm of Peat, Marwick and Mitchell. In his selection, Loyola brings on its third lay member of the Board of Trustees, and expands in number to a high of thirteen, reflecting the intention of Father Sellinger to increase the size of the Board to facilitate its functioning, and to increase the involvement of the

With the addition of Father Beatty and Mr. Zeman, the present membership of the Board includes: Very Reverend Joseph A. Sellinger, S.J., Chairman; Rev. Edwin H. Convey, S.J.; Rev. Charles P. Costello, S.J.; Rev. William M. Davish, S.J.; Mr. Edward J. Donnelly, Rev. Joseph K. Drane, S.J.; Rev. Edward S. Hauber, S.J.; Rev. Vincent L. Keelan, S.J.; Rev. Victor R. Yanitelli, S.J.; Sister Mary Cleophas, and Mr. Edward Bennett Williams.

College Evaluation Completed; Faculty Members Highly Rated

The report of the Middle States Evaluation Team concerning the condition of Loyola College was released last week, showing a number of real strengths in the college.

Most impressive of the favorable comments on the college were in relation to the faculty. While not all departments were mentioned in the report, those which were received a great deal of praise.

Philosophy Tops

The philosophy department, for example, was noted for its imaginative approach to the design of courses and was considered by the members of the evaluation team to be "far superior" in both quality and overall disposition to departments at colleges similar to Loyola. While most of the report was favorable, it was the generally held opinion that the team taught sophomore philosophy course had no more than one year of worth, and that a substitute would have to be found for the present structure.

Theology was also sighted for its cohesiveness and general performance. It was the opinion of the evaluators that some thought should be given to the possibility of developing a major in this department in the near future.

Open Labs Praised

The sciences were also given high marks, with the general opinion being that the faculty members appeared to be young, alert men whose ability to conduct a certain amount of research alone and with the students indicated a healthy condition in the departments. Fa-

Student Life Evaluates Dorm Problems; S.G. Elections Face Unusual Apathy

As the second semester begins, the Loyola College community seems to be facing up to a number of problems which have plagued it for years. In the midst of this problem solving, a greater problem than any of those presently being considered seemed on the rise, as the Student Government Elections were faced by a high degree of apathy.

In the realm of problem solution, the Student Life Commission held its second meeting, in the lounge of Hammerman House, in an attempt to reach some type of conclusion on the pressing dorm problems of drinking and parietyals.

This meeting, which lasted over one and one-half hours, consisted mainly in the questioning of the students concerning the need for the two privileges which they sought. Foremost in the minds of the Commission seemed to be the notion of responsibility on the part of the students to handle the privileges if they received them.

When the question of parietyals was raised, Commission members, Fr. McCormick, Mr. Voci and Mr. Hennessey asked why the students felt they should have been given this right. Among the most common remarks given was the fact that there was no place for----- to take his date, if he lacked the money or means to go into the city or to other cities for entertainment. It was also pointed out that even if such facilities were at the student's hands, there was no place to take a girl after a date after going somewhere. The dorm lounges, it was pointed out, lacked both the comfort or privacy that most of the students desired.

Following this exchange, it was asked if it was thought that a student would be forced out of the room, or would feel uncomfortable if his roommate brought in a date. It was pointed out in return, that most people know their roommates' girl friends, and that they would feel at ease if she was brought up. Further, if it was requested that one of the roommates leave, then most people felt that the problem could be solved on a person to person level between the roommates.

It was then asked if the students would accept a limited form of parietyals, or even a type of open house, on an expanded level. This suggestion met with favorable response from most people.

The final point of questioning centered around the notion of policing of the hours, and the prosecution of violators of the rules. Most of the students felt that they could be counted on to handle this, as they could handle other things such as cleanliness of the rooms, and overall conduct while girls were on the floor.

While this meeting was going on, the Student Government Elections were starting up, amidst an outbreak of disinterest.

In the Presidential contest, there existed no contest, as Jim Ruff, '71, ran unopposed. Most other races were one man affairs, with some offices having no candidates. Only in the Vice-Presidential contest was there a race, with Tom Barbera, '72, and Tracy Geraghty, '71, running for the post.

Early this week, freshman resident student Mike Veeck circulated a petition in an attempt to halt the elections, scheduled at this writing, for today. "It's a disgrace," he commented, "to have only one man running for the highest elective post we students have. This election should be halted until enough interest can be stimulated to get another candidate so that we can have a choice in who we elect." When asked about the possibility for an organized write-in, he said, most students wouldn't take the time to write in and that this method is ineffective.

The reason for this apathy seems to be varied, but one of the main points seems to center around the inert condition of the last two administrations. A resident sophomore commented on the fact that neither Jack Johnson nor his predecessor, Dave Townsend, had done anything, and he wondered if there was even a point in having a Student Government. Two other students made the observation that there hadn't been anything done in the past year, and that they had thought that the S.G. had gone on a permanent vacation.

As election day arrives, it seems that the student attitude towards their government will not change, and many forecast the lowest poll turnout in years.

Pipes Cause Big Blockup So Campus Gets A Dig-up

The area in front of the library building and the science building has been in a state of disrepair for the past few weeks, due to a major problem with the sewer pipes that handle the library building.

According to workmen for the Maryland Sewage and Septic Company tree roots had crushed the main pipes for this building. The first crack to be found in the system, constructed of eight-inch pipes, placed some fifteen to twenty feet below ground, was in front of the library parking lot. Other areas have been under excavation for similar damage.

It was learned that the cracks had caused a build-up of sewage in the basement of the library building, according to workmen, and caused "quite a mess of the place." Work on the project has been slowed up by the frozen ground and the bad weather, bringing into question the probable completion date for the work.

At the present time, about 75% of the work has been completed on the excavation level. It is not known exactly how much pipe will have to be replaced, or how much has been fully replaced at this time. Before the work is finished, there will be a massive trench running from Cohn Hall to the Library Building. It was hoped that the work would be finished within the week.

It is with sincere regret that the "Greyhound", on behalf of the entire student body, mourns the passing, on Friday, February 13, of the father of the Very Rev. Joseph A. Sellinger, S.J., President of Loyola College. Funeral services were held in Florida on Monday, February 16.

Lenten Masses

The chaplain's office has announced that during the Lenten Season there will be a series of special sermons delivered at the 4 P.M. Sunday Mass. In order to accommodate more people, this Mass has been moved from the Hammerman Chapel to the Main Chapel.

This week, the preacher will be Rev. Arthur J. Long, who will speak on "Man's Encounter With God By Faith."

entire community in the conduct of the College's policy.

The Board, under its present structure, is the governing body of the College. Under its Chairman, Father Sellinger, it serves as the final voice in all matters concerning alterations or additions to the Loyola program in both the sphere of general regulations and academic development. All standing committees of the college, either directly or indirectly, are answerable to the Board.

On Campus

On Sunday, the Hammer revives under the direction of John Smachlo and Frank Dukes. The Coffee House entertainment will be held on the second floor of the Student Center between 6:00 p.m. and midnight. All are invited to attend. There may be a small admission charge.

Administrative Problems

Among the things questioned the most were the general administrative co-operation in the program with Mount Saint Agnes, and what the team felt was a less than openly communicative situation within the administrative situation of the college itself. It was the opinion of the evaluators that this lack of communication in the administrative levels caused problems which should be dealt with at once.

The comments concerning the student life indicated that the apparently apathetic situation and attitude of the student body was one which must be handled soon.

As with past evaluations, it was stressed that, while the present library staff is dealing as well as could be expected with the needs of the college, the co-operative library with Notre Dame must be pushed forward as quickly as possible.

No Overall Evaluation

Through no overall evaluation of the college was included in the re-

Time

When some of us became attached to this paper a few years ago, we were, as the old-school marm would say, "sat down" and talked to about the way in which a newspaper should be run at Loyola College. At this time, we were told that certain things did not really belong in the paper, and that should we hurt someone's feelings in an issue, then it was the Christian thing for us to do to make profuse apologies for what we said.

It was all a nice, quiet, pedantic little game that we played, every once in a while, getting up the nerve for an expose, or a political intrigue neither of which would ever come off.

Starting last week, the Greyhound has abandoned this tack, as it has abandoned the position of "radical" spokesman for the college. The time has come for this paper to serve its purpose within the structure of the college, and to make known publicly certain problems, of rather massive proportions, which face Loyola. Further, it will do its part in establishing an honest forum for the discussion of these problems, in the hope of reaching a quick solution for them.

These problems are of such proportion that the efforts to correct them must be begun now! They include this newspaper, they include the problem of grades. They are of such importance that the time has come to pull down the stupid little political fronts, and mincing little non-committal phrases which have marked the Loyola scene for years. It is time for the faculty to offer some firm, realistic solutions to the students and administration, and to realize the myriad problems outside of the classroom which effect performance within the classroom. The time has come for Loyola's teaching community to realize that their commitment to education does not end when they leave Maryland Hall, and that the paranoid retorts of "I might be rejected by them," or "Well, it's not really any of my business, and for that matter, I really don't care," must be dropped.

However, most of all, it is time that the student body of this college, got off its collectively fat ass and did something themselves for their own situation. The time has come for the students to decide if they think anything in the whole world is worth anything, and if they come to a positive conclusion to get out and work for it. Right now, some students have decided to do something, but they are in the great minority. If most of the student body doesn't give a damn, then God damn it, tell the rest of us, our sweat can find better places to be expended.

Effort

Following our first editorial, and supplying a certain amount of the positive thinking and concentration that so many people seem to desire, the Greyhound would like both to congratulate some students on their initiative, and to request others to take advantage of this effort.

This Sunday, from 7 to 11 in the student lounge of the Student Center, there will be a coffee house, conducted by a group of enterprising students really trying to do something to improve the living conditions of this college. The entertainment to be offered that night will be professional in quality and reasonable in price. All the girls' schools in the area have been contacted, and from all indications, a large number of students, from these colleges, commonly known as girls for those of you who have been in Hammerman or Butler too long, will be in attendance. To borrow a cliché from the society columns, a fine time should be had by all.

This is all well and good, some of you might ask, but what does this have to do with an editorial, or even a congratulations to someone, should you feel that matter for an editorial. Some of you may feel that this is just a bit of free publicity.

The answers to your questions lie in an evaluation of what it means to become involved in the production of such an affair, and what it means in the light of the common, droning complaint that the students of this college are apathetic.

To begin with, it takes time, initiative and a real outlay of money and effort to stage an event such as this coffee house. It is common knowledge, or at least we think it is, that stages, sound systems, refreshments and everything else you need for a coffee house or a dance, do not appear out of the dust in our unused lounges, they come out of hard work. It should also be common knowledge that the funds to start something like this are not easy to obtain, and that their investment involves a risk, not to mention the risk of dejection or disappointment should something like this die on the people arranging it. For this, if for nothing else, these students deserve our congratulations.

But now we turn to the rest of the students of this college. As we have just shown, though Loyola may be an apathetic school, by and large, that does not mean that all the students are apathetic. Some people care, and go out on a limb in the process of showing just how much they care.

This is a big risk, and not many people are willing, or can be expected to be willing, to make it. However, it is not too much to ask you, all of you, to invest 75¢ in an attempt to make an event such as this work. We simply ask you to make this small effort in making this coffee house a success, and at the same time to see the quality of entertainment that can be produced by students who are making this effort.

So This Is...

MSA Seen As A Test Of Manhood

by Ray LaVerghetta

Anyone who can maintain that college doesn't offer a challenging educational experience apparently suffers from an unfortunate deprivation. He most likely has never been to Mt. St. Agnes, either. And I'm not referring to the classroom situation, but rather to the commuter cafeteria. To perform successfully here—not to lose either your money, pride, or appetite—is a feat which represents not a small amount of ingenuity.

For example, let's look at the cold drink machine. In order to operate it with satisfactory results, one must possess a sound knowledge of the principles of probability. For one must know how to compute the chance that a specific soft drink will be delivered as desired, taking into account such factors as the time of day and the frequency of success the week before. Other more complicated variables, such as the degree which the cup of non-carbonated orange must be tilted to insure that it be filled at least fifty per cent, could best be handled by computerized data processing.

Science buffs, especially those interested in biology, could utilize the cafeteria as a lab, since it does provide outdoor phenomena under indoor conditions. Noteworthy among these is the quantity of flies, undaunted by inclement winter weather and furnishing the motivated researcher with possible studies concerning methods of survival of the diptera between summer months. It goes without saying that commuters who successfully eat in this cafeteria could have their math and science requirements automatically fulfilled.

The ice cream machine demonstrates the economic subtleties of the division of labor—sometimes the consumer receives a chunk of ice, and sometimes he gets the cream. On occasions, however, he pays for a package deal, which is a euphemism for getting the wrapper when the ice cream remains stuck in the slot.

The cafeteria also functions as a lab for psychology. For example, those interested in this discipline have surely noticed, through naturalistic observation, that those who kick the machines exhibit a lower threshold for frustration and thus show themselves to be mal-adjusted. Those who even enter the cafeteria verify the already well-established fact that the physical needs of the body exert a greater influence than their rational counterpart, the mind.

Considering that the real academic atmosphere is in the cafeteria, if I were a girl to graduate from the Mount, I would want to receive my diploma not from an auditorium, or worse yet from the Civic Center, but from someplace more appropriate—like the kitchen.

The Nazz Has Come, They Just Need Ears

There are a lot of relatively unknown bands with albums out, and one of these is a Philadelphia-area group called "Nazz". Their first album, Nazz, and their second, Nazz Nazz, are both pretty good. The band is made up of: Todd Rundgren, lead guitarist, singer, composer, manager, and resident genius; Stewkey, lead singer and keyboard man; Carson van Osten, bass guitarist and singer; and Thom Mooney, drummer and singer.

To hear Nazz is to hear what rock-and-roll is all about, for they play with a youthfulness and vivacity rare in music of recent years. The first album gives the listener an idea of the scope of Nazz's abilities. Their hard rock is as hard as can be, with Mooney's inventive drums and Rundgren's excellent Claptonistike guitar. But the band can also create really beautiful ballads and adorn them with some of the most melodic and original harmonies since the days of the Mama's and the Papa's.

The first album also contains the group's recently re-released first single, "Hello, It's Me", which is somewhere near No. 5 on the charts in Philadelphia. The record has yet to be played in Baltimore as of this writing.

The second album, Nazz Nazz, is a continuation of the first, and contains the crowning achievement of Rundgren the composer and arranger. This eleven-minute track, "A Beautiful Song," really is such a song. The band is augmented by horns and strings arranged by Rundgren, and the song has so many parts that it never even approaches becoming boring. "I wanted to write you a beautiful song," sing four voices in incredible harmonies. "A Beautiful Song" is one of those small triumphs of rock that most people never get to hear.

Nazz is a good-enough group that there is no reason I can think of why they haven't caught on, except that they just haven't been heard.

Hard Luck Grapplers Finish Dismal Year; Injuries, Lack Of Experience Major Problem

This year's Loyola wrestling picture has been marked by an overall lack of ability for the team to gain momentum and a winning attitude, due to a number of serious losses.

Not only have the grapplers been hurt by the graduation of Bic Culter, perhaps one of the most outstanding wrestlers ever to attend Loyola, but injuries and the heavy pressure put on freshmen and inexperienced members of the team has also taken its toll. Low grades on the part of certain wrestlers has also affected the overall performance of the team.

In the lightweights, perennial threat Chuck Shelsby has been winding up an impressive total of points for the Hounds. Andy Amasia, a freshman from Baltimore's Curley High, has also contributed with a number of fine performances.

Going to the middleweights, we find Loyola facing a big problem, with Captain and four year veteran Joel Sweren supplying the only consistent results. In the rest of the section, the overall problem of injuries and inexperience has led the Hounds to attempt class changes on the part of some of the heavier wrestlers.

The heavies have been having their problems, with only one really experienced grappler in the crowd, Rich Gaar. Gaar, an excellent wrestler has been out for the greater part of the season with injuries, the latest and the worst difficult to overcome, an infected ear. Jerry Ballarotto, a junior who had limited wrestling experience in his freshman year, showed a lot of promise in the early going, but a bruised kidney, suffered in the late stages of pre-season practice, kept him out of most of the meets. Ballarotto, along with most of the team, has been forced to go into vincing decision over Catholic University. Constant powers such as Western Maryland and Hopkins have supplied overwhelming force to the Hounds, and lesser teams such as Towson and Juniata have taken advantage of the Hounds situation to score convincing victories.

quick weight losses to wrestle in lower classes, where injury has taken its toll. Freshmen Mike Hurley, Pat Connor and Jim Buccheri have filled in at various times in the heavyweights, with only limited success.

Overall, the grapplers have won only one meet, that a fairly con-

Despite the problems faced through the year, the wrestlers are pointing towards the tournament at the end of the month, where they hope to be able to pull off at least one championship and a decent showing, considering the difficulties they face.

Hard Start Finishes Hot; No.1 Hoopmen Hit Mount

Loyola's basketball hopes began high this year, but early results quickly led people to question the optimistic thoughts that had prevailed.

Starting the year with the strongest, tallest team in years, the Hounds took to the hardwood against a mediocre St. Peter's team in the Jersey City Armory. Sluggish play on the part of the Hounds, coupled with a hot night for Pete's caused a wipe out. From there things tended to go downhill.

Facing a powerful and tall Georgetown squad who have taken only three losses all year, the Hounds were again blown off the court. The results against a Seton Hall team that was to go on to take the Hurricane Classic in Miami later in the year were somewhat better, as the Hounds led at half time and went on to stay in the narrow loss.

In between this, Loyola suffered a heartbreaking loss to Baltimore University, who pulled off a two point win in the last seconds of the game. The only bright point in the first part of the season was a close win of C.U.

After a disappointing Christmas break which saw the Hounds wind up third out of four at the Scranton Tournament and sixth out of eight at the Pocono Classic, the Greydogs started to jell, and began the process with one of the biggest upsets of the season and one of the most satisfying victories in years. Mount Saint Mary's came out of the hills of Emmitsburg ruling the roost in the conference, coming off two tournament victories, and sporting an unblemished 10-0 record. Some people were calling them a super team, and the presence of two 6-9's under the boards gave a lot of credence to the talk. Before the night was over, the Mount was no longer in first place in the conference, or undefeated, and the Alpine defense of the hill folk had been chewed up by a hard nosed pack of dogs led by outstanding efforts by Mike Krawczyk and Farrell Fenzel. The last second, one point victory sent the fans screaming out onto the floor yelling "The Mount is Dead," and savoring the first victory over their arch rivals in five years.

The Mount victory obviously sparked the Greyhounds, and despite a close loss to King's and a loss to the Gordon Stiles led American University team, they tore through the conference, knocking off Hopkins, Western Maryland, Washington twice, Towson and Hopkins again, to take the lead in the Northern Division of the Mason-Dixon Conference.

Perhaps the biggest game in the last four years will take place tomorrow night as the Loyola courtmen travel to Emmitsburg to face the Mount in the second game of the home and home series. A number of things are going into this game besides the normal spice of the rivalry.

First, it is the last home game for four of the five Mount starters, and this can be guaranteed to spark their team. Second, the winner will take the Northern Division crown and the top seed when they head into the tournament at Roanoke. Third, the Mount will be out to avenge the early season loss that scarred their record.

While the Mount would seem to hold most of the incentives for the game, Loyola can be sure of having a number of things going for it. The Mount has not suffered defeat on their home court for the past four years, and the Hounds would like nothing more than being the ones to change this quickly. As the season has progressed, Loyola has formed into a cohesive unit, which was recently added to by Ed Butler, a 6-5 forward who has added real depth to the Greyhound bench, and has shown hard defense, outstanding passing ability and real punch under the boards. There is no question that he and all the other courtmen will be up for the game and the support of a large Loyola contingent at the game would really help.

Loyola Speaks Out On Sports

Tomorrow night, Loyola's basketball team will be playing one of the biggest games of the past four years, when it goes to Emmitsburg to play Mount Saint Mary's. For the first time since early Joe Phillips, who most of you probably don't remember, the Greyhounds can clinch a Northern Division championship and at the same time savor the delights of beating their archrivals on their home court for the first time since Noha joined the yacht club.

As anyone who attended the last meeting between these two teams can verify, the Mount spirit showed up well against us, as we were outcheered in our home gym by the men from Emmitsburg. Some people have claimed that the reason for the poor response on the part of our crowds has been the constant lack of something to cheer about. This no longer holds true, and for those who have managed to miss every game so far this year, we do have a good team, and a team that can take the conference title.

A game at Mount Saint Mary's is an interesting phenomenon, and those who have witnessed such an event can tell you one of the reasons why the Mount is so tough. The yelling, screaming and overall spirit at one of these games is something that cannot help but boost the Mount and down their opponents. When somebody tells you that the rafters shake at one of these games, he is guilty of only the mildest hyperbole.

The pressures on our team tomorrow will be terrific, and if they go out to face not only a tough Mount team, but a totally partisan crowd, then there is no question, that they will be fighting back all the way against heavy odds. What we're trying to say is go to the Mount and cheer for your team, even if it's the only game you ever go to, go to this one. Your team is Number 1, help them stay there. We'd also like to add . . .
